Our charities still need you and we all need our charities to succeed. But first and foremost, we must all be vigilant during these challenging times.

You may have to suspend get-togethers for the time being, until health officials advise otherwise. Now is the time to plan for the future and the return to safe public get-togethers.

What to do in this interim period? First and foremost: stay safe and take the necessary precautions following your local/state/provincial/national government-furnished guidelines. Yes, these are difficult and challenging times but we can each do our part to ensure we see relief sooner rather than later and that the common good is served!

Stay in touch with your players and keep them informed via social media or your website, of what you are doing so that once it is safe to resume activities involving groups being together, you will be ready with some exciting bingo events.

We are connected! We are inclusive! We are responsible!

We are here to support you!
Talk to us about how you can plan for future events that celebrate all that we are – collectively and individually!
